

Clarendon Lawyers' growth continues – adding third Director in 5 months

Wednesday, 30 November 2016

In an ongoing period of exceptional growth and success, corporate legal advisory firm Clarendon Lawyers has announced that accomplished specialist property lawyer, Mike Steell, has joined the firm as a director.

Formerly a director with Gadens' property team in Sydney, Mike has relocated to Melbourne to join the Clarendons' partnership. His appointment at Clarendons closely follows that of equity capital markets expert Nick Golding in July, and private equity and venture capital specialist Alex Bean in August.

The third director to join Clarendons in just five months, Mike bolsters the firm's director group, and significantly strengthens its client offering in the real estate sector.

Mike has built a successful career specialising in property law with experience in all forms of property transactions, including acquisitions and disposals, commercial, industrial and retail leasing, property due diligence, strata and freehold subdivisions and property development. He has worked on a range of noteworthy property matters for major residential, commercial, industrial and retail clients, small and medium enterprises and high net worth individuals across a range of industries and sectors over the last decade.

In announcing Mike's appointment to the firm's partnership, Clarendons' Founder and Managing Director, Tony Symons, said Mike brings strong intuition and perspective to the firm. His skills and technical ability will further enhance the firm's specialist client offering across the full suite of corporate legal advisory services.

"Culturally, Mike is an excellent fit for our firm; he has a strong client focus, and his passion for our unique market proposition is really exciting.

"Mike is joining our team at a time when the real estate sector is experiencing strong growth; investors are seeing a wealth of opportunities in the market, and the State and Federal Governments have committed to a significant investment in infrastructure development.

"Mike's expertise and experience will really come to bear in these circumstances, and will contribute to our ongoing focused growth and success," Tony concluded.

In discussing his move, Mike said he is thrilled to be joining the young, dynamic firm, and is looking forward to the opportunity to help shape its exciting future.

"This firm has the bench strength and quality of expertise to deliver exceptional client outcomes, regardless of the size or complexity of the transaction.

It never loses sight of the imperative to provide clients with great service and value. It delivers what it says it will: a differentiated and compelling client proposition for mid-market corporate legal advisory work.”
